Lesson 2 For Whom Do We Write?

When a band performs a concert, an audience listens. The band director chooses music that the audience will enjoy. For example, the band would not play very serious music for an audience full of children or "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star" for a group of grandparents.

When a writer writes, an audience reads. A writer needs to think just like a band director does. Ask these questions.

What will my audience enjoy?
What are they interested in?
What will make them want to keep on reading (or listening)?
What will they understand?

Listed below are some possible audiences. What might they be interested in reading about? Choose topics from the box and match them up with a possible audience. Some topics might match with more than one audience.

Writing Topics
