

Public Policy in the United States (500 Tips)

Public Policy and Administration 500: Research methodology, an introduction.

Introduction:

This PowerPoint is to review how to do research and the types of information that exist since this may determine where you start your research. This will also cover recommendations on sources that will help you do your research and then how to format in the APA style.

Review of Research Steps:

The hardest part of research is picking a subject and where that topic will show up. The computer searching today looks for words not subjects or the words meaning.

Consider:

- 1- is your topic too big for five pages or too small for twenty pages. The words, public administration find almost 11,000 potential articles while the subject public administration finds about 6,500. This is still too much to look at for a 5, 20 or even 100 page paper after all three volume encyclopedias have been written about this subject. Meanwhile the subjects of public administration and personnel management and United States gets under 50 potential articles making a nice twenty page paper.
- 2- will the topic take a twist; talking about public administration in the United States is very different from public administration in United Kingdom (Great Britain). Would you follow the political science viewpoint or management? This will define which place you start your research. Since political science could be public policy or political science and management could be business area.
- 3- building your vocabulary is very important. For example United Kingdom or Great Britain means the same things to us Americans but the computer sees it as two different sets of words and concepts. The words you type in define your topic might have synonyms or use old time subject words like public sector or government sector (which also could be called federal, local, county, city, etc.). As you view findings look at the subject fields to see what subjects have been used as it will lead you to terms/words you had not thought to use – repeating searches using the new terms/subjects will find you different results or even better results.

Now you have your vocabulary:

Once you have your vocabulary/terms/subjects you will need to use the Boolean logic (math) to get the computer to link the terms into for better results. AND narrows, OR increases, NOT takes out, * helps get plurals without typing; "quotes around words" is to get a phrase NOT individual words. Finally always used the research databases to help
